

HELPLESS AS BABY

Down in Mind Unable to Work, and What Helped Her.

Summit Point, W. Va.—Mrs. Anna Belle Emey, of this place, says: "I suffered for 15 years with an awful pain in my right side, caused from womanly trouble, and doctors lots for it, but without success. I suffered so very much, that I became down in mind, and as helpless as a baby. I was in the worst kind of shape. Was unable to do any work."

I began taking Cardui, the woman's tonic, and got relief from the very first dose. By the time I had taken 12 bottles, my health was completely restored. I am now 48 years old, but feel as good as I did when only 16.

Cardui certainly saved me from losing my mind, and I feel it my duty to speak in its favor. I wish I had some power over poor, suffering women, and could make them know the good it would do them."

If you suffer from any of the ailments peculiar to women, it will certainly be worth your while to give Cardui a trial. It has been helping weak women for more than 50 years, and will help you, too.

Try Cardui. Your druggist sells it.

Write to: Chattanooga Medicine Co., Ladies' Advisory Dept., Chattanooga, Tenn., for special instructions on our cardui 64 page book, "How to Treat Women," in plain wrapper, N.C. 12.

New Mexico Live Stock Notes.

J. H. Graham of Carlsbad last week sold to John Richards of Stanton, Texas, all his yearling steers including a few older ones numbering about 140 head. Mr. Richards topped the herd which included quite a number of the yearlings at $10 while for the remainder he gave $25.

The biggest cattle transaction recorded in Carlsbad recently was consummated last week when the firm of Baker and White, ranching forty-five miles east of Carlsbad, sold 1,100 steers to Hugh Rodgers of Fort Worth for $70,000. The cattle were three and four year olds. Delivery was begun Monday, when 250 steers were shipped from Glavin to Fort Worth.

Frank A. Hubbell, sheep grower, recently purchased 8,000 head of sheep for delivery at the Washington ranch near Lovington. An outfit to receive the sheep was gotten together at Hagerman by Jim Hubbell, the outfit consisting of fifteen men and twenty-five pack burros. The sheep will be trailed to the Hubbell ranches in western Socorro county.

The Polled Angus Cattle company, capitalized at $100,000, which was recently incorporated, will take over the holdings of the Black River Land and Cattle company. This property includes 8,000 acres of deeded land and 65,000 acres of leased land in Bddy county.

Two hundred thirty-five steers, all two year olds, were purchased from Harry Makenson, of La Lande, for the Walter H. Long ranch in Chaves county. The steers were received by Sam Mitchell, foreman for Long.

The Shipley Bros. Cattle company, operating near Clovis, has sold a more than $50,000 worth of stock in the last six weeks, one sale amounting to more than $15,000.

WOMAN JUDGE TO BE NAMED IN LOS ANGELES

Los Angeles, Calif., Aug. 17.—A woman judge in the county superior court will be appointed in the near future by the civil service commission. The position will be the first of its kind created in California, if not in the United States.

Action of the county follows closely that of the city in placing Mrs. Alicia Gilbert in the office of "city mother," where she is at the service of troubled parents and erring or ignorant girls.

The woman judge will be known as a referee. Her findings will be in the nature of recommendations to juvenile judge Sidney N. Reeves, who will hear virtually all cases involving women defendants and juvenile offenders.

A civil service examination will be held to create a list of eligibles for the position. Only those women who have been admitted to the bar of California, and who have had experience in probation work will be considered as qualified to take the test. If the office fills the sphere intended it is expected that similar positions will be created for women in every county where they are allowed to hold public office.

A HEALTHY, HAPPY WIFE

is the greatest inspiration a man can have and the life of the family, yet how many homes in this fair land are blighted by the ill health of wife and mother!

It may be backaches, headaches, the tortures of a displacement, or some ailment peculiar to her sex which makes life a burden. Every woman in this condition should rely upon Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound, made from roots and herbs, to restore her to health and happiness.

IN APPLE PICKING TIME

By IZOLA FORRESTER.

(Copyright, 1915, by the McClure Newspaper Syndicate.)

Things were deadly dull at Green Pastures. There was only the colonel, herself, Peter, and Peter's wife.

Certainly on pleasant days the Mohawk rode over to argue with the colonel, but he didn't count. Gwennie always called him the Mohawk. He was so tall and straight like an Indian, and his face, too, was not unlike one with its keen unblinking eyes, slightly aquiline nose, and thick dark hair.

He never noticed the colonel's daughter. She was away most of the year. It had not occurred to him to ask the colonel anything about her. It was enough that during July and August she appeared and managed to upset some of the regular routine of life for both of them.

It was three years now since he had bought up the adjoining estate to escape from memories of a woman—a very wonderful woman with cool hands and smiling eyes who had married his closest friend later. He did not like persons of the feminine persuasion any more.

Today, as he rode down the forest road, he was thinking of apples, oddly enough. It was the season of apples. Every now and then he had passed an orchard with trees hanging heavy with fruit. He caught himself thinking of his boyhood and of a boy who had loved to climb apple trees and find the ripest of the lot, and all at once he stopped Monsieur in the road.

There was a boy evidently hooking apples in the colonel's best orchard. He dismounted, passed Monsieur's bridle rein around the fence post, and entered the orchard.

Under the particular tree he paused. Only a vague outline of a figure in blue overalls far up in the branches rewarded him.

"Need any help, old man?" he asked gently. "You could get them easier with a pole and a bag."

Just then the leaves and branches parted, and he found himself looking straight into Gwennie's laughing face.

"I'm not hooking them, Mr. Insee. I'm trying to get the Shepherd Sweetness in for father. Don't you want to hunt a ladder and help?"

So it happened that all through the long morning, the two worked faithfully together, unknown to the colonel. Old Peter traveled back and forth with wheelbarrow loads in baskets, and tree after tree lost its precious burden.

When lunchtime came, Gwen sent for sandwiches and fruits, spread it out under the apple tree, looking deliciously boyish and odd in her overalls, with her hair tucked up into close braids around her head. It was the first time in years that Stanley Insee had felt the old thrill of boyhood fun.

"Happy?" asked Gwen once as he leaned back his head and laughed over something. "I never knew you could laugh like that."

"Very happy," responded Insee. "I don't see how I ever managed to overlook you in petticoats and discover you in overalls."

"You don't like girls, do you?" Gwen was always very direct. It was hard now to evade the look in her eyes.

"I can't bear them," Insee said frankly. "Perhaps I'm rather afraid of them. They are apt to be disturbing to one's peace of mind."

"There must have been somebody"—Gwen paused, cut a careful slice from the chicken, and went on—"somebody who hurt you some time to make you feel like that."

Insee smiled back at her, mustily. "What else, witch?"

"Oh, nothing. It doesn't concern me one bit, anyway," said Gwen cheerily. "Only don't be so grumpy all the time. I need you for a neighbor and a good pal this year. I'm not going away."

Mr. Insee did not answer for a minute or two. He glanced up thoughtfully at the piquant face opposite.

"I'm awfully glad you're to stay at Green Pastures. The colonel and I need feminine influence badly. Do you mind including me?"

Gwennie applied herself strictly to the serving of the lunch remains and avoided his eyes.

"Won't I be disturbing?" she asked. "Horribly so, thank heaven. You're disturbing me now, Gwen. You're upsetting the peace of three years. You're increasing my heart action. Gwen, and I was told expressly by the doctor when I came down here to avoid anything that was liable to increase the heart action."

"I won't disturb it," Gwen answered, placidly. "I'm a heart balm. Just a nice, quiet heart balm. Peter'll see you if you do that."

But Insee did not notice Peter still wheeling away apples. He had lifted Gwennie's tanned little hand and looked at it as it was the oddest curiosity, as if it were the oddest curiosity, and then held it to his lips. It was not cool. It felt warm and human, and he felt that she was absolutely right. He had found heart balm.

A New Eight-Cylinder Cadillac

THE new Eight-Cylinder Cadillac is ushered in on the heels of the most impressive success ever recorded in the motor car industry. It follows a car which has entrenched itself in a positive position of preeminence.

The whole country now knows that the number of cars which are even candidates for comparison with the Cadillac, has been narrowed down until they can be counted on the fingers of one hand.

The country no longer asks if the Cadillac is as fine a car as some other; but inquires, instead, what other cars compare with the Cadillac,—and how.

If public opinion could be translated into a few simple words, it would doubtless result in the statement that there never has been a motor car equal to the Cadillac Eight,—either in performance or in stability.

It is this kind of a car—this one example of V-type efficiency, demonstrated by a year's experience—which the new Cadillac succeeds.

It succeeds a car which many thousands of people believe to have been the best car which the world had yet produced.

The new Cadillac is the fruit of experience, acquired in the building of 13,000 V-type Eights, and of their service in the hands of 13,000 users.

We believe that in this new car the V-type engine is developed to a point of excellence which even the most conscientious effort to equal, cannot reach in many and many a day.

A year ago the Cadillac Company was blazing new paths of progress. It pioneered new principles and new processes, pushing them to a point of certainty before its first V-type engine was marketed.

Nothing can take the place of that hard and painstaking period of invention, selection, rejection, adjustment and adaptation.

As a result, there is but one V-type standard based on extended experience; that is the Cadillac standard.

There is but one V-type criterion based on a demonstrated certainty; that is the Cadillac criterion.

It is obvious, therefore, that the first Cadillac Eight is the source from which V-type development must borrow its inspiration.

And in that fact lies an exceedingly important consideration.

In the pioneering process to which we have referred, the problems solved were peculiar to Cadillac construction.

They referred to that intimate relation between all the parts and all the processes of manufacture which make for a harmonious whole.

The Cadillac transmission and the Cadillac clutch—to cite only two of a number of features—were developed with direct reference to the requirements of the Cadillac V-type engine and the Cadillac car.

Their adoption by other makers may or may not be successful.

It is not the V-type engine, merely as a type, which has proven such a triumphant success, but the Cadillac Eight-Cylinder V-type engine, built into a Cadillac chassis according to Cadillac ideals—and as Cadillac artisans know how to build it.

That is what we meant when we said that nothing can take the place of Cadillac experience in building 13,000 cars.

That is why we do not believe that the equal of this new Cadillac Eight will exist for many a long day.

The first Cadillac Eight furnishes for those who would emulate its excellence, the one certain source of V-type information, based on extended experience.

And the second Cadillac Eight, with that wonderful experience to build upon, naturally and logically marks an advance over the initial achievement.

There are no doubts or uncertainties about it.

Its advantages and virtues are all clear and positive and plain.

It has taken the one safe V-type criterion and carried it to the highest pitch.

It is twelve months away—13,000 cars away—from the least or last element of experiment.

Its pre-eminence cannot consistently be questioned.

In the face of the widespread adoption of the very principles which produced that pre-eminence, its leadership is not even a subject for discussion.

We believe that the new Eight-Cylinder Cadillac embodies the most practical combination of all "round efficiency."

No really desirable qualities are sacrificed in order that some less essential—which provide more spectacular, but empty "talking points"—may be exploited.

We believe that it possesses a maximum of the worth-while characteristics which the most exacting motorist wants in his car—power, speed, smoothness, flexibility, ease of operation, dependability and endurance.

We repeat—again—we do not believe the equal of this new Cadillac exists.

And we do not believe that it can or will exist for a long time to come.
